Washington, Oct. 30.—The points of similarity eineen the Alaskan and Venezuelan boundary lisputes are so marked as to indicate a strong robability that both will have to be settled in the same manner, either by arbitration or by Great Britain in each instance usurping valuable terriries to which the titles were indisputably con idered American until recently. It is significant both cases that the discovery of gold has been the immediate cause of England's extending her claims, and that in North as well as in South America the contention is based on a north and south line instead of one parallel to the equator, meridians of longitude always being unsatisfactory lifficulty of fixing them with any degree of satisfaction in ancient times.

In Alaska, as well as in Venezuela, the British solicy has been that of delay in specifically adoptng territorial limits, in order to secure as much time as possible for encroachments by her ever advancing colonization methods. In Alaska the United States secured from Russia by the treaty definite an amount of territory as geographical science in 1825 was able to specify. In 1825 Russia and Great Britain ratified a boundary treaty, fixing the geographical limits of Alaska and the Norththe geographical limits of Alaska and the Northwest Canadian territory, at that time practically mexplored. By its terms the dividing line began at the southermost part of Prince of Wales Island, declared to be 64 degrees 40 minutes north and between 131 and 133 west, the variation of two whole degrees of longitude being due to the fact that greater precision could not at that time be secured. The latitude, however, was fixed with as much practical nicety as is obtainable to-day. The line then ran due east to about 131 west to Portland Channel, along which it ascended north as far as the point of the continent where it strikes 66 north latitude, and then along the summit of mountains parallel to the coast as far as the noint of intersection with the Islat degree west longitude, thence on this meridian to the f.ogen sea. It was undoubtedly the idea of the Rushians in making this treaty that a ridge or backbone rau northerly on the Continent, which would constitute 4 definite natural boundary to their possessions, and records exist to prove that Alaska was originally held to include all territory which drained into the Pacific Ocean or all the country to the summit of the watershed formed by the unexplored mountain chain.

Another clause of the treaty between Russia and Great Britain, however, provided that whenever the summit of the mountains parallel to the coast from 18 north to the intersection at 181 west proved to be more than ten marine leagues distant from the ocean, the limit between British possessions and the line of coast which is to belong sessions and the line of coast which is to belong sessions and the line of coast which is to belong sessions and the line of coast which is to belong to Russia "shall be formed by a line parallel to the own the ocean, the limit between British possessions and the line of coast which is to belong the whole extent of Alaska. The word "ocean" in the second clause, however, has proved a useful peg on which to support the British pretensions, for, while the winding of t west Canadian territory, at that time practically explored. By its terms the dividing line began

A CHANCE FOR COMMANDER LUDLOW. HIS CASE TO BE REVIEWED BY A SECOND ENAM-INING BOARD.

Washington, Oct. 30 (Special) .- Commander Ludiow is to appear before a second examining board. This decision was reached by the authorities to-day as the best solution of a case which has already benoteworthy. The Commander had prepared a efence of his course in the case of Commander erry, and this was to have been handed to the President. It is now thought that what he has to nt in the way of explanation should be con idered by a Board and not by the President. The cond Board will examine the case from the beheld, and its report will go to the President for review. Commander Ludlow's defence will be that. when he replied to the first set of interrogatories Sperry's promotion, in which he stated that that officer's character and conduct were commendable. not lost sight of the Lieutenant's earlier errors. Suspension as a punishment had been imposed for these infractions of discipline, and the matter was treated as an incident of the past, to able replies to the second set of interrogatories, saying that Lieutenant-Commander Sperry was not professionally up to the standard, Commander-Ludlow will explain that the misconduct of his former executive occurred after the first answers were

The second Examining Board will convene in this city in a few days. Commander Ludlow will be represented by counsel, and it is said that he will present resented by counsel, and it is said that he will present a strong, clear case. At first the impression here was that the Commander had been guilty of a serious indiscretion, and that the result would be unfortunate for him. As the facts come to light, it geems that the question of dates figures conspicuously in the case, and that on further consideration of the fuller explanations to be presented the President is likely to regard the matter more favorably, and finally approve Commander Ludiow's promotion. It is learned that in his indorsement on the record of the report of the first Board the President said in effect that he had to rely on replies to interrogatories submitted by examining boards to form his judgment of the character and efficiency of officers, and that if these replies were influenced by personal animosities they were valueless. The President intimated that Commander Ludiow had either been too lenient in answering the first questions sent to him or too severe in his later statements.

It is said at the Navy Department to-day in the way of compilment to Commander Ludlow that recently, when Captain Evans was detached from the New-York and ordered to the Indiana, Admiral Bunce, after scanning the list of all available naval officers, applied for Ludlow as the relief of "Fighting Bob." At that time the Commander's case was before the President unacted on, and Captain Scaley was sent to the New-York Ludlow's selection by Admiral Bunce to command the flagship of the most powerful American fleet affont is regarded by naval officers as a high tribute to his character and ability.

CAPTAIN BASSETT DYING.

THE AGED SENATE OFFICIAL PROBABLY HAS BUT

A FEW DAYS MORE OF LIFE. Washington, Oct. 30 (Special).-That interesting personality, Captain Bassett, is lying at his home this city at the point of death. Those who are in regular attendance on him say he can hardly survive longer than two or three days. The physicians and nurses have given up hope, and his death is looked for almost at any moment. The old man's strength is gradually vanishing. Last night he was too weak to turn himself over in bed. His stomach is unable to retain the little nourishment swallowed. The irritation of this organ has all along been the principal aliment. At his advanced age it might be expected that there would be a falling of all the powers. But the Captain, always a prudent man, has husbanded his strength, preserved his vitality and retained until extreme old age almost full pos-session of temarkable physical powers. Captain Bassett has always enjoyed the entire respect and confidence of the public men whom he has served or who have come into personal relations with him. More than that he has had their personal esteem and friendship. It is his boast and his due meed of praise that he has been longer in the service of Congress than any other officer ever employed by that body from the foundation of the Government to the present moment. From page under the eye of Webster to 'assistant to the sergeant-at-arms' under the eye of Sumner and later of Sherman-what a long record of official duty; what a career for the observation of public affairs and the acquisition of personal information of distinguished men. It has been often remarked that locked up in his breast are many startling secrets, and many curlous incidents which would surprise the world if revealed. But those who know the old captain best say that he will die with the more injurious of these secrets unrevealed. His scrupulous sense of honor and his abundant carefulness, combined, will keep them well hidden. But it is known that his memoirs have been prepared, and that the manuscript is now in the custody of a lawyer of this city. Perhaps these would have been published in his lifetime but for his desire to avoid even the possibility of wounding the feelings of a certain statesman with whom long ago he had, against his will, but in the discharge of duty, some unpleasantness. It is said that the blography abounds in anecdote of Senators and others connected with the public business as well as personal incidents flustrative of Congressional life. Such a prolonged career in such a place could not well be barren of incidents, even if the person who lived it were not as observant as the venerable captain has always been. He has frequently given hints of occurrences, full information of which he declined with a shake of his while head to give. These and many other matters he has doubtless reserved for his memoirs. To the public the news that Captain Bassett is so near the close of his long and useful life, while not unexpected, will cause deep regret and sincere expressions of sympathy. The most picturesque character at the National capital will be missed here, for his place cannot be filled in this generation and may not be filled for generations to come.

Washington, Oct. 30 .- The annual report of Cap-Ordnance, which has just been presented to the Secretary of the Navy, shows the character and extent of work done and contains an estimate of $5,457,584 for carrying out the plans of the Bureau for the fiscal year ending June 39, 1887. Included in this amount are tiems of $25,000 for arming and equipping the Naval Militia, $500,000 toward the armament of auxiliary cruisers, and $4,390,204 toward the armament of vessels authorized.

Hinch, by was, a lose of life would doubtless have occurred The hotel is a six-story brick structure, bounded by Chambers, Reade and West sts., and has fire escapes on the three sides. The five upper stories are let out as furnished rooms by Arthur Buxton, whose family live on the third floor.

Mrs. Buxton saw volumes of smoke coming from the baggage-room about 8:15 o'clock, and, seizing her ten months' old baby, who was asleep in his ran to the window and shouted an alarm to who pulled a firebox on the corner and sounded an alarm with his night stick.

Then he climbed up the Chambers-st, fire escapto go to the frantic woman's aid. Smoke was pouring from the third and fourth story windows by this time, and Policeman Harrison soon arrived and climbed up after Hinch. A dozen men were at the upper windows calling for help, fearing to leave their rooms, owing to the dense smoke.

Policeman Hinch carried the Buxton child in his their rooms, owing to the dense smoke.

Policeman Hinch carried the Buxton child in his arms and helped its mother down the fire escape. James Buxton, her nine-year-old son, was lowered down by a rope by Thomas McCue, a lodger, from the fourth floor, amid great excitement. The rope slipped through McCue's hands, burning them painfully. Edward Riley, another lodger, caught the boy in his arms, and he was unhurt.

Hinch rescued Jefferson Ferris from a room on the sixth floor and carried him down the West-st. fire-escape. He was nearly unconscious from the smoke when Hinch battered in his room door.

At the same time and while Engines No. 27 and No. 20 were pouring streams of water into the blazing rooms, Policeman Harrier was looking for lodgers who might be asleep. On the sixth floor he found James Cleary, thirty years old, in Room 25. The door was locked and Cleary could not be aroused, so Harnier kicked in the door and carried the half-dressed man down the fire-escape.

Thomas J. MacArthur, fireman of Engine Company No. 29, found "Jimmy" Connell, a lodger, clad only in an undershirt, asleep in a fourth-story room, and he carried him down a fire-escape, as Connell was too blinded and overcome by smoke to help himself.

Chief Bonner was in charge of the fire, and Cartaln Adam Cross and his reserves from the Leonard-st, station were there. They kept back the crowd and prevented some of the lodgers from going into the burning building for their clothing. Had the fire started two hours later, Captain Cross said, it would have resulted in the loss of several lives.

The building is owned by the Rhinelander estate.

L. Fountain, a produce dealer on the first floor, also suffered some damage by water.
Several of the terants lose all their belongings, which were not insured.

NOVEMBER WEDDINGS AND THE GOWNS PREPARED FOR THEM.

What to wear as a wedding garment is a vita question just now in view of the important marriages which are to come off during the month of November. A number of charming tollettes are being prepared by the leading dressmakers. An exceedingly pretty frock, after a model by Rouffe, is made of a stiff pearl-gray satin, with a brocaded rosebud pattern. The skirt is plain and very flaring and the bodice is made tight fitting with a pearl embroidered collarette, cut with a curve over the shoulders, then another curve toward the front, and then over in a blouse pleat to the waist. On either side of the band is a pleating of pale, pink chiffon, running under the band toward the top, and spreading out to form a blouse at the lets on the shoulders, confines the fulness of the large puff sleeves, which, below the elbow, are very tight to the wrist. The bonnet to be worn with this gown is a becoming Ettle confection by Firot, consisting only of a frill of white lace, loops together with an art that is inimitable.

successful creation by the same artist and intended for a young girl is a low-necked frock with large puffed elbow sleeves, made to wear over a of white satin, which is gathered in the neck and has tight-fitting sleeves, embroidered with crystal. The pretty robe itself is of pale blue sik, cut very low over the shoulders and the edge bordered with a necrosedge bordered with a narrow standing-up pleating of blue satin. The sleeves and the bodice both have their fulness pleated into the neck, and on each pleat is a string of isolated cut crystals. The broldered with crystals, and the same arrange-ment of strings of crystals hangs all around the waist. The skirt of this dress is also plain,

The rule, therefore, for a bridal tollette should be, "Keep the satin quite away from the face and substitute face if pos-Doucet has managed this very well in one a very young bride. The bodice is made almost entirely of rare old point, side pieces only of the satin being introduced under the arm. WHAT HE SAW IN HIS RECENT TRIP.

BUSINESS PICKING UP-A HOT CAMPAIGN IN Chauncey M. Depew reached the city early yesterday morning in time to attend the all-day session of the trunk line presidents. Mr. Depew, accompanied by Cornellus Vanderbilt, has been absent from the city a week. During that time they made a tour of inspection of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad, the "Lig Four" and other Vander-Et lines. When their special train switched off at Cincinnati they went on to Asheyille, N. C., where a visit was paid to George W. Vanderbilt at his place there. Mr. Vanderbilt calls his place Biltmore, and Mr. Depew says that it is one of the most beautiful spots in the world. They returned over the Southern Railway, the Chesapeake and Ohio and the Pennsylvania to New-York, Mr. Depet when seen yesterday and asked about the trip, said:

I saw more business men than politicians on thi trip. It was a business trip mainly. We found the lines in superb physical condition, and I hardly know of a place where any radical change will be effected. Everything is running nicely and we are satisfied. We ran for about five hundred miles over the Southern Railway, and the traffic that is being done by that road is surprising. Their statement for Ocher of this year shows a gratifying increase over October of last year. The Exposition at Atlanta is taking many people South, and there seems to be an air of industry everywhere. The Chesapeake and Ohio is doing wonderfully well. It runs through a succession of mines. All these mines are running. the plants are working and everybody seems to be

"The campaign in Ohio is the hottest campaign that I have seen for some time. It is by far the hardest struggle of the year. There are certain is-sues involved that are foreign to a Governorship contest. The fact that Bushnell and Campbell are Brice and Foraker are candidates for the Senate met by long white gloves. In lieu of a belt is another small crown of orange blossoms, which from the left side continues down the skirt diagonally in two long ends, which diverge as they proceed to the hem of the skirt.

Very chic are the bicycle suits for girls of twelve or fourteen, who look particularly well in such a costume. A well made and well cut Norfolk jacket, a beil skirt, smooth on the hips, pleated in at the back, opening in front with the front breadth arranged as to flap with six or eight buttons in either side, and wide hem with nine rows of stitching, is the arrangement most in vogue. It is worn, of course, with knickerbockers and leggings of the same material as the dress. A new English opera cloak which is very effective has a voke of green velvet. This is cut small and square, and into it is pleated a rich flowered brocade, which falls in long, straight, full folds to the feet. The sleeves have immense armholes and are full to the wrist.

Marie Antoinette fronts, made of a different material, will apparently be a good deal worn this winter. They furnish a capital way of renovating old dresses, and for evening gowns they are par ticularly pretty, a new front and Marie Antoinette fichu making quite a transformation.

The new tea gowns at Mmes, C. and D.'s are most fascinating, for there is no garment that admits of such fantusy. One lovely affair is of mits of such fantasy. One lovely analy is of flowered silk, turned back with immense revers of velvet, bordered with a narrow frill of old lace. The revers are matched after the manner of a coat-collar, and in the notch is a full bouquet of loops of assorted velvet ribbon, with two long ends which go behind the lower revers and hang over to the hem of the gown. The sleeves and chemisette of this robe de linge are of gold embroidered white si'k and the collar is of velvet to match the revers.

Both are avowedly working for the seat, and every voter that casts his ballot in the campaign has as much in view concerning the seat in the Senate as the election of a Governor. This makes the legislative fight a bitter one, and the candidates for the places in the Legislature are being scrutinized more closely than they othewise would be.

"Campbell is making a unique campaign. He has reverted to the oil-time thursh' campaign. He has reverted to the oil-time thursh' campaign. He has cast aside the leading issues and made issues of his own. He has attacked a local leader in Cincinnati named Coxe. He cites the fact that if he is defeated this man Coxe will become the leader in the State, and that he is not a worthy boss. He carefully steers aside from the tariff and the money question, and seems to be making the run on his own popularity. He was forced into the fight under peculiar circumstances, and he is playing a theatrical part. It is a regular fireworks campaign. He is swinging around the circle, addressing three or four large meetings a day, with a pyrotechnical display of words, but little argument, and generating a great deal of enthusiasm. The fact is noted in the State that if he wins he will be the logical candidate of the party for the Presidential nomination next year. It would, as you can see, make him a tremendous factor if he overturns the cnormous majority of 180,000 cast for McKinley. He will not do that, however. He has assumed too big a task. I think that Bushnell will win, but it will be at a reduced majority.

"Ohlo seems to have revived from its period of business depression. The public seems to have adjusted itself to the knowledge that no more harm can be done the country by tariff tinkering. With a Republican House and Senate and a Republican President two vears hence, they feel safe, and are consequently going right ahead. It's a tribute to the Republican party that they are doing so.

The Tribune management is to be commended for its enterprise, and just now the effort is most happy. Democratic fakes will not be given space in The Tribune, although we regret to say some widely circulated metropolitan journals in sympathy with the "old gang" have allowed themselves to be imposed upon.

BY FAR THE BEST JERSEY EDITION From The Hackensack Republican. The New-Jersey edition of The New-York Trib-une of this (Thursday) morning is by far the best New-Jersey edition ever issued by any New-York newspaper.

DESTINED TO BECOME POPULAR

PESTINED TO BECOME POPULAR.

From The Asbury Park Journal.

The New-York Tribune deems the neighboring State of New-Jersey of such Importance that it is now printing daily a special Jersey edition; and, so far as news goes, and reliable news, too, The Tribune has hit it the first time. This edition must become popular because the people are quick to appreciate enterprise that makes their interests and daily doings its chief aim. It may also be remarked that The Tribune is doing splendid service to the Republican cause and advancing the chances of John W. Griggs as the next Governor of this sodden Democratic State.

A RESPONSIBLE AND CAPABLE HEAD. From The Newark Advertiser.

James Martin, the well-known newspaper correspondent, has taken charge of the New-Jersey edition of The New-York Tribune, which now consists of two pages. Mr. Martin is one of the ablest and most experienced journalists in the State, and has a wide acquaintance with men and affairs in New-Jersey, which is something of a noveity in the management of suburban departments in New-York newspapers. The Tribune has secured a responsible as well as capable head for its New-Jersey editions Mr. Martin lives in Arlington.
